

Guide-book of the Forgotten Bulgaria: From Veikata peak to the Valley of the meat-eating bears

On the map of Bulgaria, somewhere in the East Rhodopes, there's a long-forgotten territory, where time seems to have been stopped for ages, and people have been replaced by ghosts. There's the moonscape; the secrets that this land hides are unimaginable. The only traces left of what had once been a stormy-tossed life are the sticking out stone walls and the almost rotten roof beams of the abandoned houses. For one reason or another, the villages were depopulated and a lot of the mysteries were carried away by the people. Have you ever heard of the lost Turkish village Emirler, abandoned around 100 years ago, and do you know why all of its inhabitants left in only a day? Do you know why the sergeant-majors in Botyrches military picket became hard drinkers and went mad? Why it's a good idea to have respect for the dead in the East Rhodopes, and not push their hospitality too far? Do you have a guess? We can tell you all about this the way we saw and experienced it on our long way through the East Rhodope Mountains, from Smolyan to the very Vetrenik peak (Kodjale) on the frontier between Bulgaria and Greece...
